@mx_joao the strange black arrow is there maybe because you are using Faenza-Darker or Darkest icon theme. Try with Faenza-Dark or copying places/24/start-here.png icon from Faenza-Dark to Faenza-Darkest.

This loads so fast when I 'enable' it using the switch, that it makes me wonder if it's not partially loaded in the background somehow, as it loads much faster than most extensions. Is there any way to tell if it's totally unloaded rather than uninstalling it?

Storing settings in a json file is a very smart idea. It's a nice extension, although it could be further improved. For instance the box could expand or shrink depending on the number of icons, and it could also be shown at the bottom or at the sides of the screen. Keep up the good work!

It's okay, but the icon on the notification bar is a bit too small for me. The end user needs to be able to tweak these extensions more than just a simple off an on. Perhaps there is an extension that allows the user to scale the notification bar. I will never give a rating higher than 3 until the usability of Gnome 3 reaches at least the same level as Gnome 2

4 months ago

 by forsetius

It's okay. Right what I need for my netbook. Still it's inconsistent with other indicators on the bar. It indicates ON state by green dot and OFF state by gray dot - it's alike that on/off switch left of the extension's title. But the other indicators turn white in ON state and are dimmed in OFF state. This is better not only because of visual consistency but also because the dots are superfluous thus decreasing readability. Personally I dislike them also because they are asymmetric to the  they belong to. This said, it's very good and very helpful add.
